

where has our integrity gone? I am outraged at Sinclair's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election. Shouldn't we trust the general managers of the local stations to make these important decisions for the people in their markets?

The airwaves were created to serve the people, yet it is obvious in recent years, that large corporations have been monopolizing some markets, and putting their own personal slant on what they report to the public, to better serve their private interest and profits.

Sinclair's actions do not serve the general public, but strive only to force their political views upon us. As you know, television is a very powerful tool and many people are easily swayed one way or the other, after seeing something on t.v. We need to strengthen media ownership rules, in order to better serve the public. Thank you.
